Investigate using sources

My hypothesis is this is a fragment from a cup. I think this would belong to a rich person.

I think this because it is more fancy decorated and polished and glazed so that means it would be more money and more special. So I think that this could be from a cup or a mug because it has a lip.

My hypothesis is this is a fragment from a smoking pipe. This artefact is from around 100 to 200 years ago. This is a primary source. This might of been from a rich person or a poor person.

I think this because it's not really decorated. So I think this is a fragment from a smoking pipe but mainly rich people would have.

To write about historical artefacts

These are shards of pottery or a jug from around the Medieval to Georgian times. However my hypothesis is that they were decorative stones.

These are parts of a jug ~~there~~ the jug may be heavy as a big jug means a heavy mug. However my hypothesis was that they were broken ornaments.

I believe that this could be a piece of jewelry such as a necklace.

We had artefacts on our tables. For each item, we created a hypothesis explaining the origin of the item (including whether or not the item is authentic) or explaining how the item became part of the household where it was found.

We used a timeline to help us find out where they may have come from.
